COMMUNITY NEWSPAPERS

I am delighted to introduce the SA History Week program for 2006 and especially pleased to launch the inaugural program of SA Open Heritage. I hope it will become a permanent feature of History Week.

Once again I would like to acknowledge the outstanding contribution of the committed and enthusiastic volunteer history community of South Australia. This year's program of events is larger than ever and is a most impressive demonstration of the on-going commitment of our volunteers who are vital to preserving our history and heritage and presenting it to the wider public.

As South Australians we value our history and work hard for its preservation. That history comes in many forms – from our heritage places and precincts, to the stories that are told in our museums, libraries and archives. Together they constitute a precious resource for us and for generations to come. They help to define who we are as South Australians and to project South Australia to the world.

The South Australian Government is proud to sponsor SA History Week and SA Open Heritage.

I trust that you will enjoy this opportunity to see South Australia's history first-hand.

MINISTER ASSISTING THE PREMIER IN THE ARTS

Once again, the History Trust is proud to bring SA History Week to the South Australian community.

This is a bumper program, with more community participants than ever before and a huge range of events to choose from. For the first time we also include SA Open Heritage, opening the doors to a selection of South Australia's heritage treasures. We hope you will enjoy visiting some of these unique historic places.

I would especially like to thank all of those community partners who have joined with us to make SA History Week such a success over the past few years. Their passion for the past is clearly evident in these pages and bodes well for the future of history in our State.

History and historians have been much in the media in the past few years. Sometimes these debates have become quite heated. But perhaps this is a good thing – a sign that we care enough about our past to engage with it. After all, our past is always present, whether we recognise it or not. Events like SA History Week allow us to get to know it better and to use that knowledge to strengthen our community for the future.

DIRECTOR

History Trust of South Australia

SA Open Heritage is an initiative resulting from a collaborative effort between the Department for Environment and Heritage and the History Trust of South Australia.

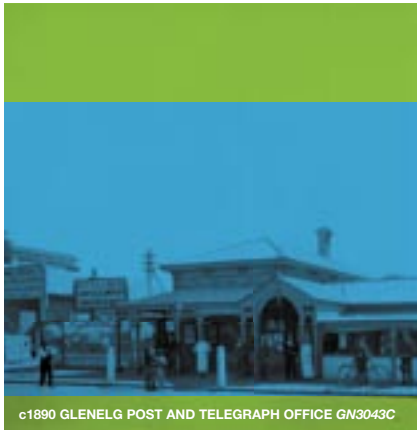

The SA Open Heritage program was inspired by the vision of my colleague, Hon John Hill MP, the previous Minister for Environment and Conservation. Minister Hill recognised that opening the doors to heritage enables people to enjoy and learn from privately-owned heritage places. It also gives the owners the opportunity to be recognised for the great work they do preserving our community's past for future generations.

I thank the many owners who have opened up their homes and special places in order to share their part of South Australia's heritage. I am pleased that my Department has been able to support this pilot scheme in South Australia during the 2006 SA History Week and wish all involved every success.

Introducing SA Open Heritage

1928 SOUTH AUSTRALIAN RAILWAYS GN6178

c1890s KING WILLIAM STREET LOOKING SOUTH FROM GRENELL STREET GN3197

For the first time, the SA History Week program includes the new SA Open Heritage.

SA Open Heritage is modelled on the highly successful and long running UK model of Heritage Open Days. It is a joint venture between the Department for Environment and Heritage and the History Trust of South Australia. It was developed through the vision and commitment of former Minister for Environment and Conservation, the Hon John Hill, MP.

SA Open Heritage in 2006 will offer South Australians the opportunity of a behind-the-doors glimpse inside some of South Australia's less well known but loveliest heritage places.

Fifty two participants in the Cities of Adelaide and Port Adelaide/Enfield and in selected Hills townships are taking part in this inaugural event, showcasing 83 heritage buildings. As some of these heritage places are not generally open to the public, this is an opportunity not to be missed.

As part of SA Open Heritage, Adelaide City Council and the National Trust of South Australia have developed a special 'Open Doors' program for the City of Adelaide's significant heritage places.

President of the Royal Australian Institute of Architects, South Australian Chapter, Carolyn Wigg said about the SA Open Heritage initiative:

'This State has an excellent architectural heritage, from early colonial architecture to the 20th century, with some outstanding interiors. SA Open Heritage will remind the public that our heritage is priceless and enriches our lives'.

So step over the threshold of some of South Australia's historic pubs, halls, mansions, cottages, clubs and places of worship and into South Australia's past.

SA Open Heritage places are indexed separately in this program. Look for the SA Open Heritage icon.

South Australian Glass Negatives Collection

c1916 RUNDLE STREET GN2010

1917 ENTRY TO UNDERGROUND HOUSE
POSSIBLY COOBER PEDY GN4165

The historical photographs used in the SA History Week program are from the South Australian Glass Negatives Collection.

This Collection has a very interesting history. Between 1890 and 1960 the Department of Lands was responsible for the official photographic record of South Australia. Initially, a government photographic unit, using equipment already owned by the Department of Lands' Survey Department, began to record government achievements, state celebrations and, for a fee, took photographs for annual reports for other government departments and for parliamentary records. Over the years, this growing collection also became a repository for photographs specially commissioned by the South Australian Government, including those taken by Frank Hurley in 1935 for the State's Centenary Committee to record the State after 100 years of European settlement (1836-1936).

By the 1970s the large glass plates used by the unit were little known and seldom required. The Department of Lands decided to send them to the South Australian Archives (now State Records). In the mid 1980s the then Constitutional Museum, a museum of the newly established History Trust of South Australia, undertook the mammoth task of re-photographing the glass negatives onto 35mm conventional film negatives and cataloguing the 14 000 images, using workers employed under the Hawke Labor Government's Commonwealth Employment Program (CEP).

Since 1985, the images and catalogue have been available at the History Trust of South Australia for research and use in publications. Extra information and corrections have been added to the catalogue by volunteer George Brooks who spent many years at the History Trust as well as at State Records identifying the images that were a mystery to the 1980s cataloguers. The actual glass negatives remain with State Records. The History Trust holds the only catalogue and copy set of the Collection.

Recorded within the Collection are ceremonial events of all kinds, the day-to-day progress of major public works and the growth of townships, ports, industry and trade. The Collection shows South Australians at work and at play. In short, the collection covers everything that interested governments either directly or indirectly.

In late 2005, work commenced on a digitisation project for this significant Collection. Once completed, sometime in 2006, it will enable researchers a much quicker and more efficient means of tapping into this wonderful photographic record. ces Manager, History Trust of South Australia on 8203 9873, or email: ldrew@history.sa.gov.au.

The Glass Negatives Collection images used in this booklet will be available for viewing on the History Trust of South Australia website after Friday 5 May. www.history.sa.gov.au/history\_week.htm

Adelaide Arcade and Gay's Arcade

RUNDLE MALL, GRENFELL STREET AND TWIN STREET, ADELAIDE

Adelaide's most beautiful arcade has served South Australians for over 120 years. Built in 1885 Adelaide Arcade reflects the maturing of the 19th century Rundle Street retail centre development. The extensive use of cast iron and plate glass on the street frontage and arcade shows the progressive work of architectural firm Withall and Wells. The entrances from Rundle Mall and Grenfell Street are of Italian style.

A most notable feature is the octagonal tower and dome with a pre-Federation Australian Coat of Arms at each end of the Adelaide Arcade. Gay's Arcade joins Adelaide Arcade at right angles near the centre. The interior of the Arcades has been carefully restored to copy the original Carrara marble and black and white tile design on the floors. Both arcades have two levels with the first floors remaining largely original.

Migration Museum (former Destitute Asylum)

82 KINTORE AVENUE, ADELAIDE

The former Destitute Asylum includes the Female Section, the Store, the Chapel and the Lying-in Hospital. Built between 1859 and 1877, with some later alterations and extensions, these buildings were a government welfare institution providing facilities for disadvantaged colonial women. The four buildings are all that remain of a large complex of 50 buildings sited around quadrangles in this area.

The Chapel was built as a schoolroom for the orphaned children of the Destitute Asylum in 1865. The Lying-in hospital on the western boundary was constructed in 1877/78 for use by women in confinement. The female section initially housed women and children and served as a girl's reformatory from 1871 to 1881. Built in 1859 it abutted a wall from the original Asylum constructed in 1854. The store was constructed in 1867 as offices for the Destitute Asylum. Group limit - 20.

NORTH TERRACE, ADELAIDE

Plus facilities in Railway Station

The Railway Station complex was completed in 1928, following a design by architects Garlick and Jackman. The large neo-classical building was part of the overall modernisation of the State's railway system instigated by Railway commissioner WA Webb. Despite loud criticism at the time for the 'extravaganza', the Gunn Labour Government supported the project as a source of employment for many workers during the early Depression years.

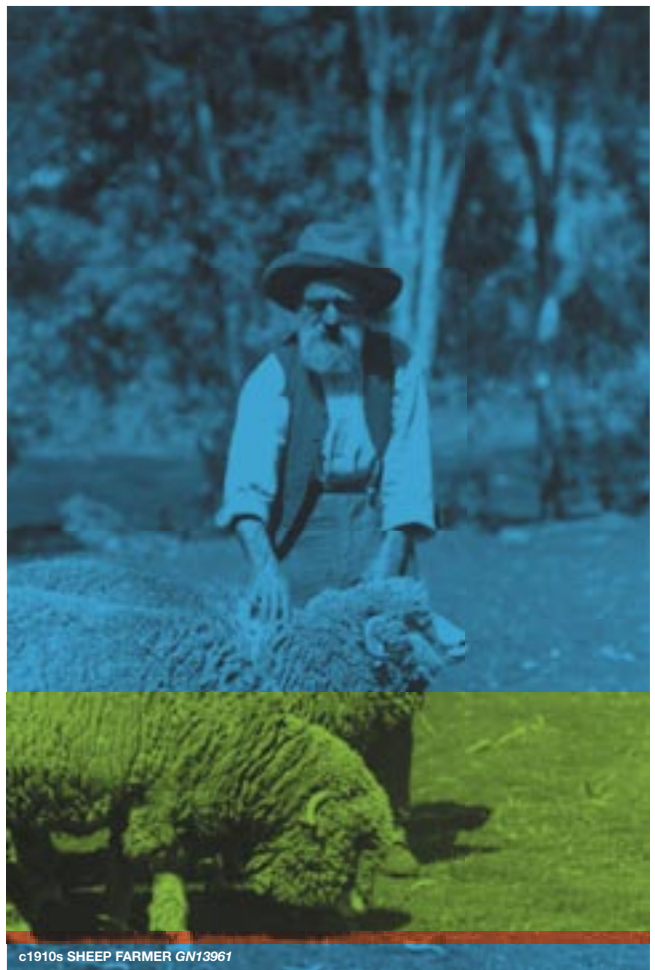

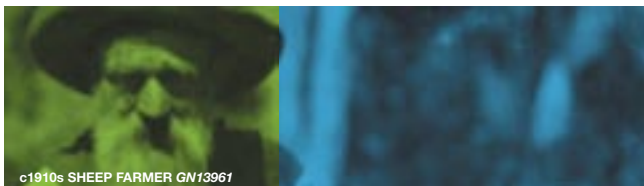

The centrepiece of the building is the grand Marble Hall, originally the Railway Station's waiting area. Topped by a 12-metre dome, Marble Hall is supported by eight giant Corinthian columns and finished with European marble. Four of the original telephone booths remain in the Marble Hall. In the 1980s Marble Hall became the entrance to the Adelaide Casino and in 2001 the home of SKYCITY.

All areas restricted to visitors 18 years and over.

Smyth Memorial Chapel, West Terrace Cemetery

CATHOLIC CEMETERY

Wylde Road, opposite Wright Street, Adelaide

West Terrace Cemetery initially comprised an oval area of 32 acres (12.95 hectares) on Colonel William Light's plan of 1837. From 1843 the cemetery was run on non-denominational lines until 1845 when the Reverend Michael Ryan requested a section of land for the Catholic community. They received four acres (1.6 hectares) which was expanded slightly as other lands within the cemetery were relinquished.

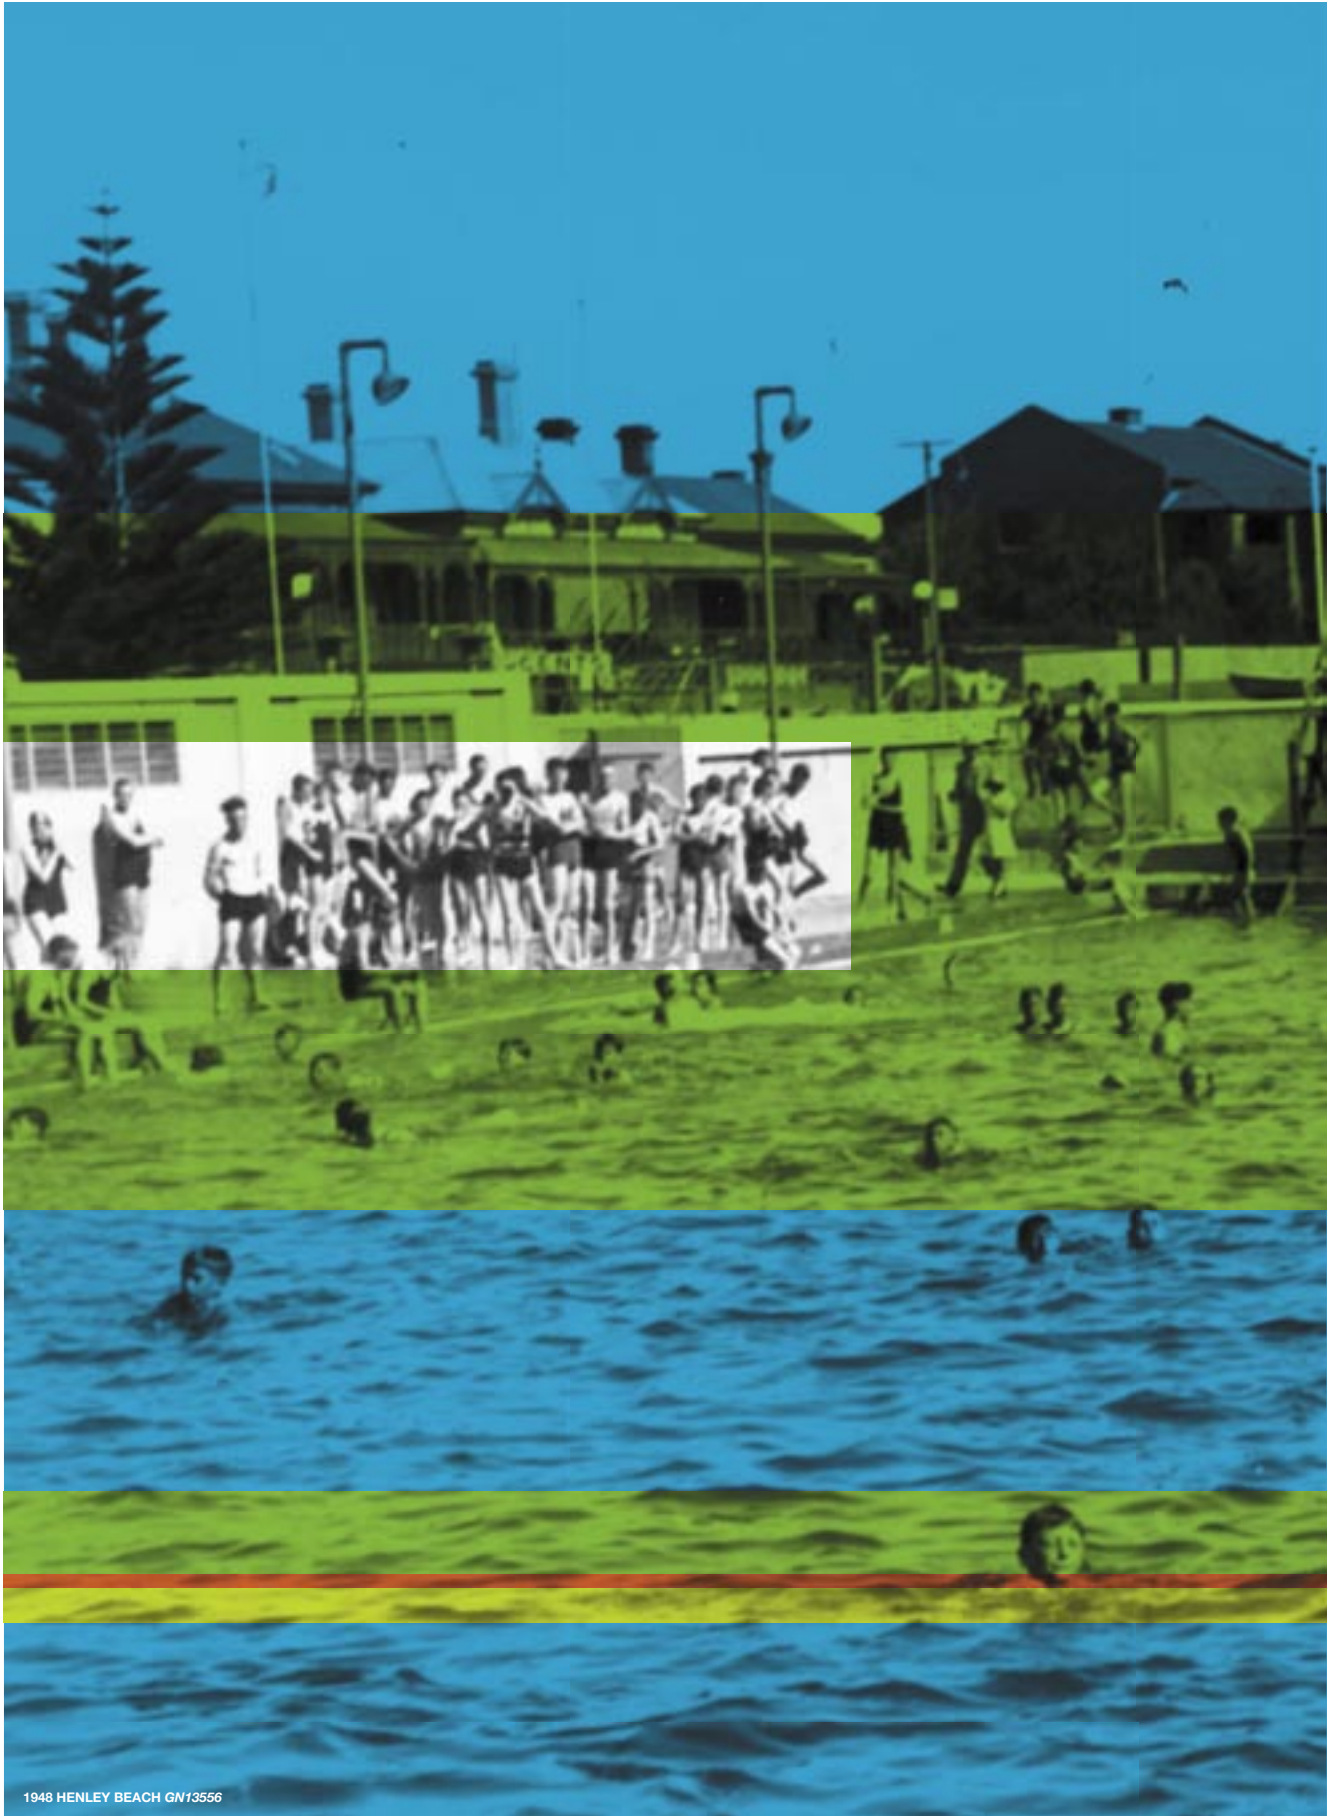

This octagonal early Gothic revival chapel is significant because buildings of this form, date and style are rare in South Australia. The building was opened on 22 October 1871 by the Right Reverend Dr Shiel. It contains the remains of Reverend John Smyth to whom the chapel was dedicated and Bishop Shiel who died in 1872. In June 1856 assent was given to an Act providing for an institution incorporating a public library and museum. The Library, Museum and Art Gallery shared premises until 1915 when the Natural History and Art Museum was opened. An Act in 1940 gave the South Australian Museum, the Art Gallery and the Library the autonomy to operate as separate bodies. Amongst the earliest buildings in the colony of South Australia is the former Police Barracks and Armoury. The barracks was a single storey building until the upper levels were added in 1882 for the mounted police force.

St Cyprian's Anglican Church and Hall

70 MELBOURNE STREET,
LOWER NORTH ADELAIDE

Opposite bus stop 4

A block of land in Melbourne Street, North Adelaide, was purchased by the Archdeacon of Adelaide and Rector of Christ Church Charles Marryat with two others in 1872 to establish a Church of England Mission Church and Day School. The Mission Church was designed by architect Daniel Garlick, financed through the parish of Christ Church and built in 1892/3. It provided for relatively poor families, including many employed by wealthy upper class families in the area. The Church was dedicated as St Cyprian's in 1898. A separate school building was constructed behind the Church in 1894. The school provided an education for the disadvantaged and working classes of North Adelaide. Following the Education Act of 1875, making education compulsory, small day schools associated with churches provided religious doctrine together with education. Group limit - 15-20.

A participant in the special 'Open Doors' program of Adelaide City Council and the National Trust of South Australia.

The Huntsman's Hotel was built on this site about 1882. Ornate chimneys and a prominent broken arch pediment create much of the beauty of this building which was designed by Rowland Rees, architect and Member of Parliament. In 1958, the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Australia purchased the property and it was transformed into Lutheran Church House. In 2002 it was sold and once again became a hotel, The Archer Hotel.
